- 60% of people who have been incarcerated remain unemployed one year after release.
- People with records earn about 40% less pay than those who have never been incarcerated.
- Today, more than 25% of U.S. workers require a license or certification before they can work in their occupation.
- For the 70 million Americans with a criminal record of some sort, "pulling yourself up by your bootstraps" is particularly difficult when hiring practices and discrimination make obtaining gainful employment an extremely difficult task.
